“Nurse Practitioners make their mark in the medical field”

Scottsdale, Ariz. — Nurse Practitioners are finding their niche in the medical field by opening up their own practices. Practitioners are authorized by the Arizona State Board of Nursing to practice as direct health care providers.

One nurse practitioner who has done this is Scottsdale's very own Lisa Williams. She recently opened Medical Aesthetics by Lisa Williams just 5 months ago.

“It’s not required that I work with a physician,” says Williams. “Representatives from the Board of Nursing, as well as nurses throughout this state, have worked hard to obtain the privileges Nurse Practitioners have been given.”

Excellence in academic education, coupled with clinical training, allow Nurse Practitioners to provide quality health care to patients. The Board of Nursing also allows registered nurses to operate lasers under the supervision of a “licensed provider.” Nurse Practitioners are licensed providers.

In addition, the Board allows Nurse Practitioners to be a direct clinician, provider of care, a prescriber and dispenser of medications, as well as medical devices, admit patients for health care, manage health care, and discharge and follow-up in ambulatory, acute as well as long term and other health care settings.

Like others, Williams worked hard to become a Nurse Practitioner. After working in a medical office under a physician, she felt inspired to open her own independently owned office.

“Individuals such as myself are looking to take the pressure and stress off doctors.”
